In my opinion, there are two interesting aspects of the gap year concept. First, having a chance to consider the future might be helpful for people who are thinking about other plans, such as being a professional athlete or musician. If such a person did not take a gap year, they would probably become too busy to pursue these plans. Second, lessons that might be learned during a gap year can be an appropriate match to what you will study later at a university. For example, in my case, I want to study engineering, because I am really interested in farming equipment and related technology. If my gap year was spent working on a farm, I could learn a lot about current trends and apply that knowledge when I start university life. (132 words)
